

Dublin interview at the Finnish Immigration Service

You have been invited to an interview by the Finnish Immigration Service. Please carefully read these instructions, which explain your rights and obligations during the interview. If you have any questions about these instructions, you can ask an employee of the Finnish Immigration Service at the beginning of the interview for more information.

What is the purpose of this interview?

- You have applied for asylum in Finland. The Finnish Immigration Service will not process your application in detail until the country that is responsible for processing your application has been determined.
- At the interview, you will be asked for information that affects the decision of examining your application in Finland, or not processing it. Your grounds for asylum will not be discussed at this interview.
- The country in which your application will be processed is determined by the procedure laid down in the so-called Dublin Regulation, which is part of European Union law.
- Based on the Dublin interview, the Finnish Immigration Service will determine which country is responsible for processing your application and if your application will be examined in Finland.
- The Dublin Regulation countries include all EU countries, Norway, Switzerland, Iceland and Liechtenstein.

- Your application may also not be examined if you have already received international protection in another EU country. In this case, the Dublin procedure will not apply to you, and the purpose of the interview is to find out any reasons why your application should be examined in Finland anyway.
- If you have family members in Finland, you may apply for a residence permit based on family ties. In this case, you must submit a separate application, for which you must pay a fee.

What rights do you have in the interview?

- You have the right to bring a legal counsel to the interview. The counsel will participate in the interview in the way they think is best.
- You must find the counsel yourself. If you do not get a counsel for the interview, we can still go ahead with the interview without a counsel.
- There will be an interpreter at the interview. The interpreter's job is to translate everything that is said in the interview without taking sides. The interpreter will either be there in person, or a phone connection or video link can be.
- The interviewer, interpreter and counsel have a duty of secrecy. This means that they may not tell any outsiders about what we talk about in the interview. We can keep your information secret from your family members if giving the information to them would put you or your loved ones at risk or harm. You can tell us what you think about this in the interview.
- As a rule, the documents concerning you must be kept secret.

What obligations do you have in the interview?

- It is in your interest to tell the truth about everything that affects your application in the interview.
- It is also in your interest to talk about things that are difficult.
- If there is something you can't remember or don't know, do not try and make up the answer. If you give false information, this makes it more difficult to believe your story.
- You should give your correct personal information in the interview. If you do not have any documents based on which your identity can be considered confirmed, you must try your best to get these documents and give them to the Finnish Immigration Service. Examples of such documents are identity documents or a travel document. You can change the personal data you provide later only if you have a reliable identity document issued by an authority.

- The Finnish Immigration Service saves your personal information and the grounds for your application in the case management system for immigration matters, which is an official register.
- Providing false personal information to an authority or giving false information to be entered into an official register is a punishable offence.
- Please note that if you give false information, or keep the correct information secret, a permit that has been given to you may be taken away later. It will also make it more difficult to process your other matters.

How should you prepare for the interview?

- Before the interview, read all the instructions and brochures the authorities have given you. It is important that you always also read the brochures about the Dublin procedure. If you do not have these brochures, you can find them on the Finnish Immigration Service's website: <https://migri.fi/en/brochures-and-publications>. You can find them under the heading 'Asylum and the Dublin procedure'.
- If you have a justified reason to ask that the interpreter or interviewer is a woman or a man, tell an employee of the reception centre about this well before the interview. The reception centre will send your request to the Finnish Immigration Service. The Finnish Immigration Service will assess if the reason is justified.
- If your physical or mental health may affect the conduct of the interview, tell a reception centre employee about it. With your consent, the reception centre may contact the Finnish Immigration Service about this before the interview.
- You can bring a packed lunch or lunch money with you.
- Bring all medication that you need during the day.
- Also bring all documents and reports for your application. In the interview, you must explain what they are and what you want to prove with them.
- Do not bring any children with you. If you need somebody to look after your child during the interview, tell the reception centre about this well before the day of the interview.
- Do not be late for the interview. Make sure you have enough time for the trip. The reception centre will tell you how to get to the Finnish Immigration Service.

What you should do on the day of the interview at the Finnish Immigration Service

- You cannot change the date of the interview without a good reason. If you are sick on the day of the interview, tell your reception centre about it at once. You must send a report given by the nurse or doctor at the reception centre to the Finnish Immigration Service at the latest one week after the date of the interview.

If you fail to come to the interview without a justified reason, a decision concerning your application may be made without interviewing you.

- When you come to the Finnish Immigration Service's premises, a security check may be carried out on you.
- Show the security guard at the Finnish Immigration Service the customer card the reception centre gave you.
- Only the persons invited to the interview, and other persons accepted in advance by the Finnish Immigration Service, can come to the waiting room.
- If you would like to bring a support person, you or your support person must ask the Finnish Immigration Service about this in writing before the interview. Otherwise, the interviewer will decide at the start of the interview if the support person may be with you. A support person is not a legal counsel, and they do not participate in examining your matters.
- The interviewer works for the Finnish Immigration Service. This employee will either be there in person or interview you via video link.
- The interview will be recorded. There is also a CCTV camera that records video in the room.
- You can take breaks during the interview if you need to. You can ask for a break at any time.

What happens in the interview?

- The interviewer will first explain what will happen during the interview and make sure that you have understood your rights and obligations. If you do not understand something, ask. If you do not understand the interpreter, say so.
- The interviewer will ask you for the following information:
 - your identity
 - information about your family and relatives
 - Information about your residence permits, visas and asylum applications in other countries
 - information about where you lived in Europe before you came to Finland
 - your travel route to Finland
 - reasons why you should not be sent away from Finland ('denied admittance')
 - reasons why your application should be processed in Finland if you have received international protection in another country
 - how you feel about being sent away from Finland ('removal from the country') and stopped from coming to Finland ('entry ban')
- Answer the questions honestly. Do not make up answers. If you do not know or cannot remember something, tell the interviewer.

- In the interview, you can give the Finnish Immigration Service information that may affect the decision in your case. For example, if you are suspected of an offence in Finland, or if you have been convicted of an offence in this country, this may affect the processing of your case at the Finnish Immigration Service. If necessary, the Finnish Immigration Service will give you an opportunity to state your opinion about the matter during the interview.
- A protocol is drawn up based on the interview. Depending on the interview content, the protocol will either not be reviewed, it will be reviewed with you or you will be given a deadline by which you can make additions or corrections to the protocol. During the interview, the interviewer will tell you what will be done with the protocol.

What happens after the interview?

- The Dublin Regulation sets out different reasons for why a particular country is responsible for examining your application. These reasons are: 1) family members living in Dublin countries, 2) a visa for or residence permit in Dublin countries, 3) residence in or transit through Dublin countries, or 4) an earlier asylum application. The Finnish Immigration Service will look at all these reasons in the order of importance laid down in the Dublin Regulation.
- If you would like to give us more information later, you can do so in writing. We will not talk about your case on the phone, because we cannot check the caller's identity.
- The decision on your application will be based on the information you give in the interview and other documents that are presented in your case. The Finnish Immigration Service may also use public sources to look for information that supports its decision.
- If a decision is made to send you to another country ('denial of admittance or stay'), you can appeal the decision to the court. You can also ask that the court allows you to stay in Finland until the court has processed your appeal.
- If your application is not examined in Finland, you may be sent away from Finland ('denial of admittance or stay') or told that you cannot come to Finland ('entry ban').
- If your application is not examined or you withdraw it, you have a right to apply for support for voluntary return. This support is provided on certain conditions, which will be checked when you apply for it. Ask for more information at your reception centre, or see the contact information for assistance for voluntary return on the Finnish Immigration Service's website at <https://migi.fi/en/return>.
