

Asylum seeker: You will be participating in an asylum interview via a video link from prison

Having an interview via a video link means that the employee of the Finnish Immigration Service will be at the Finnish Immigration Service and you will participate in the interview via a video link from prison. The prison has set aside a separate room for the interview and the devices you will need.

Conducting the interview via a video link does not change the content of the interview

The interview will have the same content regardless of if it is conducted via a video link or in person. We will interview you via a video link because you are in prison at the moment.

Send any additional information to the Finnish Immigration Service before the interview

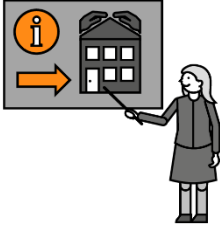

If you have obtained any documents or information related to your application before the interview, send them to the Finnish Immigration Service or to your counsel in good time before the interview. If your interview is coming up shortly, bring them with you.

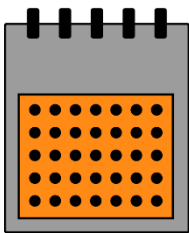

This is how you have an interview via a video link

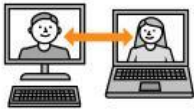

A prison employee will give you the Finnish Immigration Service's invitation to the interview and instructions for it. The invitation tells you the date and time of the interview.

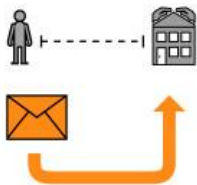

Before the interview, an employee of the reception unit will call you or contact you via a video link. They will go through the details of the interview invitation with you, give you more information about the interview, and tell you how you can get a counsel if you wish.

On the day of the interview, a prison employee will take you to the room reserved for the interview. They will tell you who can help you if you have problems during the interview, for example with the video link.

We will contact you via a video link at the time given in the invitation. We will provide an interpreter who will translate everything we talk about in the interview. The interpreter will use a video link.

Lastly, we will review the protocol with you in part or in full via the video link. If the protocol is not reviewed with you in full during the interview, you will be given a deadline by which you can submit additions or corrections to the protocol. We will post you a copy of the protocol, which you can keep.
